

THE BANK BUSINESS.

The Gazette of last evening misrepresents the JOURNAL by asserting that this paper felt called upon to give its readers a column of editorial in justification of the bank officers' acts, and takes upon itself much credit for the position it took at the time of the failure. It then claims that the Gazette took a somewhat different view from that of the JOURNAL, and attempts to have the inference drawn in its favor and to the detriment of this journal. The JOURNAL would not if it could retract a solitary word it has said on the subject. It never did excuse the Manager or any of the officials for their misconduct and mismanagement. It did take the stand, however, that these men had wronged their depositors and the public, but that it did not believe these men had been guilty of any act of a criminal nature, and the best answer to that was but a day or two ago given by Judge Rising and a jury of twelve men. The Gazette has generally taken the same position, and fully admitted as much in an article published subsequent to a withdrawal of the libel suit instituted against it by Kinkead. The Gazette opposed the findings of indictments and the entailment of the great expense to prosecute these men. So did the JOURNAL. The Gazette pretends to have done so differently from the JOURNAL, but an examination of the files of the papers will not show that the Gazette published any more of the truth about the entire matter than the JOURNAL did. The JOURNAL has never been called upon to recall a single word. The Gazette has, and justly too, in effect, retracted many things which subsequent events proved was sensational journalism. In the JOURNAL of July 9th, 1880, appeared the following comments, and the history of the case has demonstrated that what was said then was right then and is right now:

We do not believe that men who have lived in a community twenty-five years and who have always been honest and upright, and good citizens generally, should, if perchance they happen to make a mistake, be denounced in unmeasured terms, held up to public contempt and ridicule, hounded as though hanging was too good for them. No man is perfect, and there are times in every man's career when he may make a mistake. The suspension of the Reno Savings Bank was a great calamity to this town, and our earnest hope is that every depositor will yet get his money. We believe that Jim Kinkead would sooner have died than had it occur, and that he would give Satan a mortgage on his life for thirty years, if he would pay the debts dollar for dollar to-day. He is to blame for not having been more cautious, for having "wilted" too quick, for not calling upon friends for advice, for not getting the trustees together, for having allowed too much latitude to debtors like the editors of the two Reno papers, and for having made his uncle a preferred creditor, and yet in this latter case we should like to see the man who would have done differently under the circumstances. But that Kinkead has done anything dishonest, that he has robbed anybody, that he has made any false entries on the books, or that he desires to injure any creditor, we do not believe. For all of his life's labors in Washoe county he has nothing but his home, and that will have to be mortgaged to get bread for his wife and children.

Take Crockett's case: He is to blame for having had State money to his credit in that bank, and for allowing it to accumulate to such an amount as $5,000. He should have had daily returns of his collections—for all that money was the result of collections, and never a dollar was put there or kept there for the purpose of "bolstering" the bank, and when the dreadful news was communicated to him that the bank was about to suspend, no wonder he rushed to Reno, took what money he could get, and securities enough to make good the amount due the Treasury. The $1,500 of his own money in there he did not get, nor will he get it unless the bank resumes, and yet he is called a thief, and some demand his resignation.

Death of Bishop Peck.

Bishop Jessie T. Peck, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, died in Syracuse, New York, on the 18th, from pneumonia after a short illness. In 1855 he was transferred from the pastorate of the Green street Church, New York City, to California, where he remained eight years as pastor and presiding elder to the San Francisco district. Then he went East and served out pastorates in Peekskill, and in Syracuse, until in 1872, when he was elected a Bishop.

The papers are quoting the health of S. J. Tilden as excellent, etc. It is not improbable that they will trot him out for the Fall races of 1884. We do not see why the Democracy adheres so firmly to Mr. Tilden unless it is because of their penchant for dead issues. The United States is more than a hundred years old, but this is no reason why it should have a President of the same age.

Ex-Senator Pomeroy, of Kansas wants to get up a new political party. This is usually the case with men of whom the old parties have had enough.

Nevada publishes 14 daily and 22 weekly newspapers.

The New York Tribune says Pennsylvania is undoubtedly a Blaine State.

The Illinois Democrats favor Springer for Speaker of the Forty-eighth Congress.

The National Republican at Washington formally nominates President Arthur for re-election.

Senator Palmer, of Michigan, has given his first year's salary as Senator to establish an art museum in Detroit.

The report comes from Ohio that ex-Senator Thurman will enter the contest for Senator Pendleton's seat in the Senate.

The Carson Tribune says Warden Bell, of the State Prison, is reflecting credit on the Republican majority that elected him.

Congressman Kasson, of Iowa, says his ticket for 1884 is Edmunds and Lincoln. Mr. Kasson is a gentleman of excellent taste.

Lydia Pinkham, of medicine fame, died in Lynn, Mass., on the 18th, aged sixty-four. She spent $18,000 a year in advertising. Peace to her ashes.

It is gratifying to know that in Sacramento the local authorities have had all the school house doors so changed as to swing outward. This should be the rule in every school house in all the cities of the country.

The Kentucky Democrats have departed from the established precedents. Captain James R. Handman, late of the Federal army, was nominated for Lieutenant-Governor over Captain Allen, a late Confederate soldier.

The Plumas National has been awarded the contract for county printing for Plumas county, for one year for $1,000. In Washoe county $400 is the sum paid for the work, and Washoe has as much legal advertising as any county in Nevada.

A Washington correspondent says it is a well founded report that certain Republican leaders contemplate, if the "Garfield Republicans" and "Guiteau Republicans" are not united very soon, to coach ex-Senator David Davis as the Republican candidate for President of the United States.

Randall D. George is the most prosperous colored planter in South Carolina. He recently bought the Reucker lands, in Colleton county for $20,000 cash. He offers to subscribe $5,000 towards the construction of a branch railroad through the section in which he lives.

Samuel J. Tilden was born at Pittsburg, Mass., in 1814. He will just have accomplished the allotted three score and ten, according to the hope of his friends, or twice the constitutional age required for a candidacy to the United States Presidency, when his name will again be put forward for the chief magistracy.

The green 3-cent postage-stamps which goes out in October will have had a run of thirteen years. It succeeded the short-lived blue design, which came after the reds. Postage-stamps began in 1841 with a 5-cent issue bearing a portrait of Franklin and a 10-cent stamp with Washington's picture, and a second series with five denominations—one, three, five, ten and twelve cents—came not long afterwards.

John H. Parnell, a brother of the famous Irish leader of that name, owns the largest peach farm in the world. It is situated about six miles below West Point, Ga. There are 125,000 peach trees in it, besides a large number of other kinds of fruit trees. They cover 700 acres. Mr. Parnell has planted 500 acres of young trees this year, and reports his business a paying one. This year's crop will be tolerably good, notwithstanding the frozes.

Commissioner Dudley says he can send in about $10,000,000 worth of pensions this month. It was expected he would run the amount up to $15,000,000, in order to close up the estimate of the year, with a $5,000,000 batch in June. It was desirable to have the warrants smaller next month than in this, in order to have the money disbursed before the close of the fiscal year. Colonel Dudley says that while he is not able to send in more than $10,000,000 this month, he will close out his estimate for the year by sending in $10,000,000 in June. He believes that by the beginning of the fiscal year he will have every case of arrears voted upon, except those who have failed to send the required evidence.

The Reno Journal says it would like to see the secret societies take active part in the exercises on Decoration Day, and help make the procession on that day a credit to the town and an honor to the heroic dead. It is a good suggestion, and should be carried into effect here on the Comstock.—Virginia Footlight.

"LITTLE MAC."

He Gets a Rousing Reception from the Veterans of His Old Army—A Pathetic Speech by the First Commander of the Army of the Potomac.

WASHINGTON, May 18. General George B. McClellan, at the banquet of the Society of the Army of the Potomac this evening, responded to the toast: "The Army of the Potomac." As his name was announced and he rose to address the company the veterans sprang upon the chairs, and broke into cheer after cheer. For two or three minutes the clamor was deafening. The men pounded the tables, stamped with their feet and shouted themselves hoarse. Viewed from the gallery during this space of time the banquetting room was a tumultuous sea of heads, of arms, napkins, hats and even crutches, which the owners were gesticulating wildly in their unbounded enthusiasm and excitement. General McClellan stood calmly bowing during the tumult, and when it showed signs of lessening he stilled it entirely with a wave of his hand, and in a voice of deep feeling, and speaking in a measured tone, he began his greeting to his old command. Every voice was hushed. He said: "In the days long past and gone forever, when we were young and strong, full of life and hope, with the future all before us, there were such relations between us that it seems to me too cold, too formal to address you simply as Mr. Chairman and gentlemen, for our Chairman often brought to me intelligence that I needed up from the very jaw of death, and when assigned to the command of a division of new troops, he hurried by forced marches to the assistance of his commander on the bloody field of Antietam. So there can be no form or ceremony between him and myself. Very many, perhaps most of you, were with me when in this very city I assumed command of that mass of brave men, unorganized and uninstructed, who composed the nucleus of what afterwards became the 'Army of the Potomac.' Those of you who were with me then were more to me than dear comrades, more than brothers in arms; you were as my very children."

This was McClellan's opening, and in this strain he proceeded to the close. He spoke of the trying times "in which you and I did our best for the country," and recalled the well-loved and familiar faces which all missed from their ranks. He said: "I see you in this city, the Capital of the Nation, as it was when I came here from Western Virginia, full of disorganized troops, in imminent danger of attack. I see order and quiet restored as if by magic, when you at once responded to my appeals and seconded my endeavors. I remember well the mass of raw troops pouring in, badly armed and improperly equipped, but composed of the best men that ever responded to the appeal to arms, actuated by the highest and purest motives of patriotism, discussing no partisan question, knowing but one thing—that the country was in danger and that they were ready to give their lives to save it. I saw an army come out of that mass. I saw it acquiring order, discipline and instructions. Then followed the necessary work of fortifications on the capital; a work which set the army free to strike where blows were felt, and which more than once saved the capital. I saw that army become capable of being handled on the march and under fire, and leave the camps in which it had been created and go to the Peninsula. There you stood by me and I stood by you. And I do not forget how nobly you passed through your first experience of battle."

He sketched briefly at this point some of the principal battles, and alluded to the seven-days' fight as made in obedience to orders from Washington, to cover the advance of reinforcements, which never came through—the enemy came instead. "Fortunately," he continued, "this had been foreseen, and days before transports with supplies had been sent to the James to await the army." He then spoke of the gallantry with which the army fought when removed from his command, and the glad confidence with which it welcomed his return at the battle of Antietam; of his withdrawal from the Army of the Potomac on what he then believed and still believed was the eve of a decisive battle, never to meet that army again as its commander. Continuing, he said: "The army which it was my fortune to organize and create, the army that became an army of veterans, I, as its earliest and only living commander, am glad to know was unsurpassed by any of the historic armies of the world in efficiency, valor or achievement."

Gen. Baum while Internal Revenue Collector, collected over $850,000,000 for the Government while in office, and accounted for every dollar of it. This fact ought to arrest the attention of people who are given to moaning over the degeneracy of the times and the supposed universality of corruption. For forty years there has been a progressive diminution in the percentage of loss on the Government revenues, and if this does not prove an increase of honesty, it does demonstrate an improvement in book-keeping, is an excellent substitute.—S.F.
